Modern dancers and premiered their first performance in March 1958 at the 92nd Street Y in New York City. That now fabled performance forever changed the perception of American dance with its expressiveness, technical prowess and influences from African-American culture. The Company’s early days were spent traveling on what Alvin Ailey called “the station wagon tours”; dancers were transported from performance to performance in a station wagon driven by one of Ailey’s friends. From these modest beginnings, Ailey has grown to be one of the foremost modern dance companies in the world. Dancers of all races and backgrounds perform with the Company, which is also NJPAC’s principal resident dance affiliate.

“Watching Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater can change your life. If that sounds like a slogan, it’s truth in advertising.” hailed The New York Times in a review of a performance.

Born on January 5, 1931, in Rogers, Texas, Alvin Ailey came from quite modest beginnings. His mother was a teenager when she gave birth to him. When Alvin was young, his father left. Ailey grew up poor but steeped in the arts. Church services and a local dance hall introduced him to music and the arts. When he was 12 years old, he moved to Los Angeles, where he excelled in school as an athlete and a natural at languages. He appeared in other Broadway productions, such as the 1957 performance of the musical House of Flowers, which starred Lena Horne and Ricardo Montalban. He also studied with famed dancer Martha Graham and acting with Stella Adler while he was working on Broadway.

All of these experiences crystalized and informed his path toward founding Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater. The first performance by the Company was in 1958, but it was Ailey’s masterwork Revelations, which premiered in 1960, that catapulted the Company and its choreographer to stardom. Drawing on memories of his rural Texas childhood, with movement set to gospel music, spirituals and the blues, Ailey created a dance that powerfully expressed the African-American experience. Ailey called the experiences that inspired Revelations “blood memories” because he felt that they were as much a part of him as the blood running through his veins. Since its premiere, more than 25 million people in 71 countries have seen Revelations—more than any other modern dance work in history.

In 1969, Ailey established a school in New York City, Alvin Ailey American Dance Center, now called The Ailey School. He also formed the Alvin Ailey Repertory Ensemble, now Ailey II, in 1974. Both institutions supported Ailey’s pioneering work, promoting arts in education, particularly to benefit underserved communities.

In 1987, Alvin Ailey received the Samuel H. Scripps American Dance Festival Award, modern dance’s most prestigious honor. And in December 1988, he received The Kennedy Center Honors for lifetime contribution to American culture through the performing arts—the nation's highest official distinction for creative artists.

Since his death in 1989 at the age of 58, Alvin Ailey Dance Foundation has continued to carry out Ailey’s vision. In 2008, a U.S. Congressional resolution designated Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater as “a vital American cultural ambassador to the world.” With more than 235 works by over 90 choreographers in the Company repertory, including 79 of Ailey’s own ballets, the Company continues to enrich the American modern dance heritage and preserve the uniqueness of the African-American cultural experience.

In 2014, Alvin Ailey posthumously received the Presidential Medal of Freedom, the country’s highest civilian honor, in recognition of his contributions and commitment to civil rights and dance in America.

“His work made an important contribution to American culture,” dancer Mikhail Baryshnikov told The New York Times.
A deeper look into Mr. Ailey and his mission

What makes Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater different from other dance companies?

In March 1958, Alvin Ailey launched his own dance company because he didn’t see enough people of color dancing on the concert stage at the time. That first performance changed forever the perception of American dance, and more than six decades later, Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater is now the most popular and most-traveled modern dance company in the world—a cultural community that includes performances, education, and community programs. Alvin Ailey’s signature work, Revelations, has been seen by more people around the world than any other modern dance.

Alvin Ailey’s seminal work, Revelations, drew on his roots in the rural American South. Today, Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater continues to address specific aspects of the African-American experience in its repertoire. The Company’s repertory addresses aspects of the African-American experience through classic works like Mr. Ailey’s enduring Revelations as well as more recent additions like Donald Byrd’s Greenwood (racial injustice) or Jamar Roberts’ Ode (gun violence). However, the Company has long been embraced by audiences of all races and continues Mr. Ailey’s mission to use dance as a means to enlighten and unify people of all backgrounds. In 2008, the US Congress designated the Ailey Company as “a vital American cultural ambassador to the world” that celebrates the uniqueness of the African-American cultural experience and the preservation and enrichment of the American modern dance tradition.

Part of Ailey’s mission is to provide arts in education for underserved communities. Alvin Ailey said, “Dance is for everybody. I believe that dance came from the people and that it should always be delivered back to the people.” The Ailey School, Ailey Arts in Education & Community Programs, the Ailey Extension (“Real Classes for Real People”) and outreach conducted by Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater and Ailey II dancers represent a large-scale continuation of Mr. Ailey’s original vision to use the power of dance to enrich and positively impact lives, especially those of young people. Many of the 100,000 young people who participate in these programs each year face serious academic, social, and domestic challenges that have been linked to an increased risk of dropping out of school. These challenges include exposure to drugs, violence, poor nutrition and a lack of structure or positive role models in their everyday lives. Ailey Arts in Education programs provide a strong foundation and positive influences for participants, helping them to identify their own decision-making power and individual potential.

Artists and dancers of color continue to face challenges head-on. During the height of the Civil Rights Movement, Alvin Ailey was a pioneer of creating opportunities for marginalized artists of color. Today, Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater serves as a cultural ambassador to the world that celebrates the whole of human experience with an eye toward diversity.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Teacher Focus</th>
<th>Student Activity</th>
<th>NJ Student Learning Standards</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Prepare for the performance</td>
<td>Prepare your students for the performance by watching this video clip about the inspiration behind Revelations: youtu.be/IcF9Dgke7uk. Discuss with your students how Alvin Ailey used dance to bring people together, and how he believed dance came from the people and should be delivered back to the people. Discuss with your students the importance of telling your story.</td>
<td>★★</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Experience the performance</td>
<td>As you bring your students to the performance, encourage them to notice the difference in the movements of each dance and what the movements represent. They should notice how the dancers express the feeling of the music. Ask students to distinguish between movements that are inward and tight (bound flow) and those that are “out of control” and loose (free flow).</td>
<td>★★</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Reflect, respond and read</td>
<td>Encourage your students to reflect on how the performance affected them. Ask them about their favorite parts and why they preferred certain dances over others. Encourage students to demonstrate how they felt during certain dances and then explain how they felt. Revisit the discussion on the importance of telling your story.</td>
<td>★★</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Focus</td>
<td>Ask your students to focus on their own stories of growing up or a memorable event in their life. Are there any family traditions or stories they could share with the class? How can they share this story through movement, song, drama or art? Ask them to think about why they picked this particular story.</td>
<td>★★</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Originate</td>
<td>Discuss with your students the various ways to share their creativity. Review how Alvin Ailey used his own personal story to create the masterpiece Revelations. Share with your students a story from your childhood. Encourage your students to use their imagination to express their story.</td>
<td>★★</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rehearse</td>
<td>Allow your students time to rehearse their presentations. Permit the students to give feedback and constructive criticism on their presentations. Enlist the help of visual and performing arts teachers in your school to help students create. Explain to students that their presentations do not have to be literal but represent the overall theme of their story. How do you feel when you are happy? How do you feel when you are angry? Identify any emotions from your story. Ask your students to focus on their own stories of growing up or a memorable event in their life. Are there any family traditions or stories they could share with the class? How can they share this story through movement, song, drama or art? Ask them to think about why they picked this particular story.</td>
<td>★★</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Make magic</td>
<td>Create a performance area for your class. Explain the importance of performance etiquette and audience etiquette. Invite other classes and administrators to see the student presentations. Share your audience the video “A Look at Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater” youtu.be/44nqeAXLS-k. Discuss your answers.</td>
<td>★★</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Inspired Ideas in the Classroom

Preparation

- Prepare your students for the performance by watching the video clip about the inspiration behind Revelations: youtu.be/IcF9Dgke7uk. Discuss with your students how Alvin Ailey used dance to bring people together, and how he believed dance came from the people and should be delivered back to the people. Discuss with your students the importance of telling your story.

Experience

- As you bring your students to the performance, encourage them to notice the difference in the movements of each dance and what the movements represent. They should notice how the dancers express the feeling of the music. Ask students to distinguish between movements that are inward and tight (bound flow) and those that are “out of control” and loose (free flow).

Reflect and Read

- Encourage your students to reflect on how the performance affected them. Ask them about their favorite parts and why they preferred certain dances over others. Encourage students to demonstrate how they felt during certain dances and then explain how they felt. Revisit the discussion on the importance of telling your story.

Focus

- Ask your students to focus on their own stories of growing up or a memorable event in their life. Are there any family traditions or stories they could share with the class? How can they share this story through movement, song, drama or art? Ask them to think about why they picked this particular story.

Originate

- Discuss with your students the various ways to share their creativity. Review how Alvin Ailey used his own personal story to create the masterpiece Revelations. Share with your students a story from your childhood. Encourage your students to use their imagination to express their story.

Rehearse

- Allow your students time to rehearse their presentations. Permit the students to give feedback and constructive criticism on their presentations. Enlist the help of visual and performing arts teachers in your school to help students create. Explain to students that their presentations do not have to be literal but represent the overall theme of their story. How do you feel when you are happy? How do you feel when you are angry? Identify any emotions from your story.

Make Magic

- Create a performance area for your class. Explain the importance of performance etiquette and audience etiquette. Invite other classes and administrators to see the student presentations. Share your audience the video “A Look at Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater” youtu.be/44nqeAXLS-k. Discuss your answers.
New Jersey Student Learning Standards

English Language Arts

NJSLSA.R1. Read closely to determine what the text says explicitly and to make logical inferences and relevant connections from it; cite specific textual evidence when writing or speaking to support conclusions drawn from the text.

NJSLSA.R4. Interpret words and phrases as they are used in a text, including determining technical, connotative, and figurative meanings, and analyze how specific word choices shape meaning or tone.

NJSLSA.S11. Prepare for and participate effectively in a range of conversations and collaborations with diverse partners, building on others’ ideas and expressing their own clearly and persuasively.

NJSLSA.W4. Produce clear and coherent writing in which the development, organization, and style are appropriate to task, purpose, and audience.

Social Studies

6.1.A.D.13 Describe how culture is expressed through and influenced by the behavior of people.

Vocabulary

Ballet

Highly technical dance that evolved in the Italian Renaissance era and French aristocratic courts.

Blues

One of the root forms of jazz music, evolved from African-American slave songs such as field hollers, work songs, spirituals, and country string ballads.

Choreography

The art or practice of designing combinations and sequences of movements of physical bodies. The person who creates the steps, combinations and patterns of a ballet or dance is called the choreographer.

Gospel music

Music that relates or celebrates the teachings of Christianity and events of Jesus’ life.

Katherine Dunham

Dancer-choreographer who was one of Alvin Ailey’s early inspirations. Dunham’s dance style combined Caribbean, African and American dance influences.

Kinesthetic awareness

The sensory skill that allows you to know where your body is in space and in relation to other people and things around you. Dancers must develop a strong kinesthetic awareness in order to keep their spacing during choreography.

Lester Horton

African-American dancer and choreographer who was one of Ailey’s early mentors and teachers.

Martha Graham

Pioneering modern dancer and choreographer whose technique, based on the opposition of contraction and release within the body, has been called the cornerstone of American modern dance.

Modern dance

A form of contemporary theatrical and concert dance that uses special techniques and the entire body in movements that express abstract ideas.

Multi-racial

Consisting of or representing members of more than one racial group.

Revelations

Things that are revealed or disclosed, especially something striking that has not been realized before.

Rural

Relating to, or living in the country, as opposed to living in towns or cities.

Spirituals

Music that relates to religion, the spirit or soul.

Time

A measurable period during which movement, dance or music occurs. Dance and music make the passage of time palpable by dividing it into anything from complex, rhythmic patterns to periods of long, unbroken stillness.
Popular dances and their connections with Africa

On the African continent, people danced to celebrate weddings, births, good harvests, and other occasions. During the height of the transatlantic slave trade, millions of souls were placed in bondage and shipped to the Americas, bringing with them their particular traditions of dance from various West and Central African communities, tribes and kingdoms. When the African diaspora settled in the New World, people from different regions in Africa mingled and forged communities, removing European and different African cultures that laid the seedbed for many cherished art forms, such as jazz, blues, hip hop and others. On the plantation, enslaved Africans continued their tradition of dancing every day or for celebrations but they blended different tribal practices. One example of this cultural remixing is cakewalk, an art form born in Brazil that is both dance and martial arts and is practiced all over the world. In America, dance moved from the plantation to minstrel shows in the 19th century. These shows consisted mostly of white entertainers in black face, performing in comic skits, dance numbers and song—most of which caricatured and stereotyped black people and culture. There were some African-American performers also in minstrel shows. These shows were racist in nature and portrayed black people in a negative light but they were vehicles to present some aspects of African-American culture to a mostly white audience.

One of the most significant cultural transfers via minstrel was the popularization of the cakewalk, a dance created by slaves who were imitating high society ball dances. This dance became very popular among white people in the late 19th century. Other dances with African roots that became widely practiced were the Charleston, the Lindy Hop and the Jitterbug.

Tap dance has its roots in 19th century Manhattan, where free African-Americans lived closely together with Irish immigrants and other recent European arrivals in slum neighborhoods. In these communities, the black people would incorporate African tribal movements with Irish jig and English clog dancing, creating a new form of dance that tap legends like Howard “Sandman” Sims, Jimmy Slyde, Bunny Briggs and Gregory Hines perfected into a dazzling rush of expressive, virtuoso movement.

Sandman was famous for introducing sand into his tap, which produced sounds that could range from soft and gentle to loud and gritty. Slyde was known for his energetic jazz-inflected dance performances and his signature move, the slide. Briggs, who had been dancing since he was a young child, performed with bandleader Duke Ellington and at the Apollo Theater in Harlem. Hines, a multi-talented performer who could sing and act, did much to introduce tap to new audiences in the late 20th century via nationally televised specials and movies and by mentoring younger stars like Newark native Savion Glover.

Contemporary popular dance, such as breakdancing, twerking and krumping, have roots in urban black communities. Breakdancing is close tied with the evolution of hip hop as a whole and is considered a vital element of that culture. Twerking has become massively popular, moving from clubs to national television. Krumping is another dance form with origins in urban black communities in California.

Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater has incorporated vernacular popular urban dance into choreographed modern dance pieces, such as Exodus, which takes hip hop and burnishes it into something stirring and timeless.

“It is very much alive... so arresting that the audience welled over with excitement,” Judith Jamison wrote. “It is very much alive... so arresting that the audience welled over with excitement,” Judith Jamison wrote. “very early hip hop. A key figure in this country’s dance history is Katherine Dunham, who was an innovator in incorporating ballet and modern dance forms with African and Caribbean movements. She had an academic background in anthropology, which aided in her research on various dances of the African diaspora and also in driving her artistry as a groundbreaking and prolific choreographer. She formed her own dance company, which was widely acclaimed and most active in the 1940s and 1950s. Her revolutionary performances had a big impact on many dancers, including Alvin Ailey, who was inspired to take classes with her.

Others who advanced the artistry of African-American dancers were Carmen de Lavallade, Geoffrey Holder and Judith Jamison—acclaimed performers who have been involved with Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater. De Lavallade, 88 years old and still dancing, has a background in ballet and was also a member of the Lester Horton Dance Theater, like Ailey. She had danced for the Metropolitan Opera in large-scale productions as well, making her one of the first black people to do so. Such is her long and fruitful career, which has involved not just Ailey but also dancing for jazz greats like Ellington. She was named a 2017 Kennedy Center Honors recipient. De Lavallade’s husband, Geoffrey Holder, was a great dancer, actor, singer and director. Holder, who died in 2014, specialized in folk dance but also was a principal dancer with the Metropolitan Opera Ballet in the 1950s. For Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater, Holder choreographed the pieces The Prodigal Prince and A daligia for Deadly. To a wider audience, he was known for his 7UP commercials in the 1970s and 1960s and as a James Bond villain in the movie Live and Let Die.

Judith Jamison has been associated with the Aliley Company since 1965 and is currently the Artistic Director Emerita. As a dancer in the company in the 1960s and 1970s, she performed major roles in productions, earning wide praise for her skill, passion and stage charisma. She is especially known for her performance in Cry, a solo piece choreographed by Alvin Ailey for his mother. Before becoming Artistic Director in 1969, she guest-starred at other ballet companies and formed her own dance troupe. Under her leadership at Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater, she choreographed dance pieces, and the Company also performed classics from its repertoire and new works by other choreographers. Her success as a dancer and artistic director has earned her many plaudits, among them a primetime Emmy Award, a Kennedy Center Honors, and a National Medal of Arts.
In-School Residencies: Drama + Social Studies. Dance + Math. It all adds up in NJPAC's In-School Residencies in which professional teaching artists partner with educators to bring the arts into the classroom. Each 7- to 10-week program culminates in a student performance or an interactive family workshop. All programs address state and national standards. NJPAC is the regional provider in New Jersey for international arts programs like the NJ Wolf Trap Program and Dancing Classrooms Global.

Assemblies: NJPAC presents engaging school assembly programs that are presented by professional artists that invite students into the enchanting world of live performance. NJPAC's assembly series promotes cultural awareness and invigorates learning by presenting works that are connected to your school's curriculum.

Professional Development: NJPAC Professional Development engages classroom teachers, arts specialists and teaching artists as integrated teams that combine arts pedagogy, content, classroom management and social behavioral strategies to ignite and inspire arts-rich classrooms. Working as a team empowers teachers to share practice and strategy. Our goal is to inspire artistic and intellectual capacities in students, building competence and confidence in both students and teachers.

Saturday Programs: NJPAC's Saturday programs are geared towards students at every level—from those who dream of starring on Broadway to those who are still learning their scales. Students work with professional artists to build technique and develop their own creative style in film, contemporary modern dance, hip hop, jazz, musical theater and symphonic band.

Summer Programs: Want to begin to explore the arts? Or immerse yourself in the study of one genre? Then join us at NJPAC next summer in one of seven programs that spark the creativity in every child through the study of music, dance and theater.

For more information or to schedule an appointment, please call our education sales team at 973.353.7058 or email artseducation@njpac.org. Visit njpac.org/education

NJPAC Arts Education programs are made possible through the generosity of our endowment donors: The Arts Education Endowment Fund in honor of Raymond C. Chambers, The Joan and Allen Bildner Family Fund, Albert and Katherine Merck, and The Sagner Family Foundation. Generous annual support for NJPAC Arts Education Programs is provided by: NJ Advance Media/The Star-Ledger, McCrane Foundation, Inc., care of Margrit McCrane, John and Suzanne Willian/Goldman Sachs Gives, MCJ Amelior Foundation, Amy Liss, Jennifer A. Chalsty, Johnson & Johnson Family of Companies, Panasonic Corporation of America, and Atlantic, Tomorrow’s Office, Stewart and Judy Colton